

Got a Pretty Severe Shaking Up

With his shirt torn into ribbons, his nose and face scratched and bleeding and his body badly bruised, William P. Wallace, of 1834 South Fourth street, Camden, testified before 'Squire Rouh yesterday that it was all due to an argument with his employer, William Hingle, of 1720 Van Buren street. Hingle admitted shaking his employe, who was asleep on a lounge in a house on Mulford street when supposed to be on duty. He was held in $2000 bail.
