Camden Reformers Chop Off Heads of Policemen and Others

Eight policemen were discharged from the force by Camden's City Council last night, and reform supporters named in their stead. The Republican employees of the Water Department must also make way for their reform successors, appointed at the same time.

The policemen discharged were: Lincoln James, Albert Stein, John Sinclair, William Selby, Caleb Williams, Abraham Jackson, Jacob Hicks and Frederick Laird. Their successors are: Isaac Lovett, Albert Keyser, Robert Miller, John Wagner, Isaac Brown, Thomas Moore, William Harrison and Albert Batten.

The appointments by Mayor Hatch of William L. Hurley as a member of the Commissioners of Appeal, and Charles Watson a member of the Board of Health, were confirmed.

Council voted unanimously for the ordinance to issue $85,000 thirty-year bonds to be used in building a high and manual training school.

When the ordinance providing a change in the terms of Water Department employees from two years to one year came up for second reading, Councilman Sayrs vigorously opposed it. His protests were ignored by the passage of the ordinance. An ordinance to appoint Water Department employees was then passed, and the following were named: Martin McNeill, resident engineer; John Wallace, Henry Tallafarro and Joseph Cline, engineers; Horace Huellings, George Riley and Owen Macey, foremen; Lee S. Mills, extra fireman; Albert Primrose, George Davis and Joseph Wagner, coal wheelers; Henry Schafer, engine wiper; Henry Hertline, foreman; Joseph Wilgus, caulker; John T. Rodan and James Melon, tappers, and John K. Esler, Jr., teamster.

In the report of the Finance Committee came the bill of City Clerk Kramer for $480 salary. Objection was made to the payment, and a tie vote decided against the bill.
