

Fritz Heimach Bests Shawkey, Ruth Gets His Second Home Run

Fritz Heimach's sturdy left arm hewed down the Yanks in the afternoon game and shot his pals to the fore by the score of 4 to 2, in a contest featured by thrilling moments from bell to bell. Fred had speed and a dandy curve ball. Young Mr. Heimach is a courageous youth and he showed this in the ninth inning.

The celebrated Babe Ruth tied the score for the Yankees in the sixth inning by clouting the ball into the right field stand for his second homerun. Ward was on first at the time and the long clout tied the score. The Athletics went to the front again in the seventh, but in the eighth Ward once more tied the score by hitting into the left-field bleachers.

In the ninth, the Mackmen with two out scored their winning run when Frank McGowan singled, stole second and scored all the way from the key-stone sack when Wally Schang threw the ball into the centre field.

Next came the Yankees' half of the ninth. Thirty thousand were there and thirty thousand fans can make a lot of racket on a holiday. To start the inning, Meusel lifted an easy fly to Galloway. Pipp hit a grounder to Young. Pep had to hurry his throw with the result that the ball went over Johnston's head and the batter reached second.

Thirty thousand fans jumped to their feet and let out a wild yell. "Here's where we tie it again," shouted an excited spectator. Excitement ran high. Except in the pitcher's box where Heimach stood as cool as a cucumber. The Camden, N. J., youngster was facing his biggest task of his young major league baseball career.

But he came through it like a veteran. Scott popped to Galloway. Schang, who won the morning game for the Yankees and who already had made two hits, was purposely passed. Devorner batted for Rob Shawkey. Devorner is quite a hitter, but he swung at a curve ball and popped weakly to Young and the game was over.
