

MURDERER GIVEN TALKING MACHINE

Woodward, Condemned Boy Slayer, Operates Phonograph in
the County Jail

IS HAVING LOTS OF FUN

Familiar Strains Ring Through the Cells to Youthful Prisoner's Great Delight

Paul Woodward, sentenced to be hanged on January 7 in the Camden jail, asked permission of Sheriff Mines to have a talking machine in "Hangman's Row" so that his fellow-prisoners might not be annoyed by his attempts to perform on a whistle and harmonica.

The request was granted. Last night the strains of "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Abide With Me," followed by a number of Sousa's marches rang through the jail. The prisoners joined in the chorus of the songs. The condemned man got a whole lot of delight out of the phonograph, which he manipulated until a late hour.
